WEGA members are covered on a group basis by Public Liability Insurance and for member-member injury. Personal Accident cover should be individually obtained if required. Participants on our field trips are required to read, sign and follow our excursion safety information. Available on website and on excursion.

The Group's aims are:

To promote a wider interest in the science of geology through organised lectures, field excursions and social activities.

To provide a link between the amateur, the student the teacher and the professional geologist.

To foster interest in geological sites within the area with a view to their study and wise conservation.

To establish and maintain good relations with organisations that have a common interest.

WEGA's History and the University of Bristol

WEGA was founded as an off-shoot of the extra-mural classes of the Earth Sciences Department of the University of Bristol, with the inaugural meeting held in October 1975. There was great support for WEGA from many members of the Geology Department staff at that time, and we continue to have close relations with the Department. Now that the Department has stopped its formal extra-mural activities, WEGA is very well placed to engage with amateur geologists in the local region.
